St. Georges Technical High School Chooses Honeywell

In today's times, school security has never been more important. When tasked with creating a security system to protect St. Georges Technical High School, design engineer Edward Fayda selected integrator Advantech and Honeywell as his partners of choice. The team created a single integrated system that incorporates intrusion, access control and video for the largest technical high school in Delaware. Honeywell's Digital Video Manager (DVM) platform makes the system less dependent on operator observations and enables real-time decision making. And the Pro-Watch® security management system and OmniClass smart card readers provide an expandable, one-card solution for multiple applications. Knowing the technology used is leading edge, Ed believes they've created an ideal template for any school to follow.
